A flight simulator, ordered last year by the DETA airline of Mozambique, has arrived in Lourenco Marques. The simulator is designed to train locally the airline's pilots; hitherto they were sent to the USA for such training. DETA also announced that its fourth Boeing-737 was due soon and plans had already been finalized to acquire the airline's first Boeing-707.

With the exception of Vila Prey, all the other nine district capitals of Mozambique will by the end of this year have been provided with international airports capable of receiving Boeing-737 jet aircraft or their equivalent.
