

Mozambican report of S African intelligence agent's book

Maputo in Portuguese 1700 gmt 29 Oct 81

A former agent of BOSS, the South African secret police, has revealed in a book to be published [words indistinct] in Europe that South Africa has been engaged in acts of sabotage in Mozambique for five years now. Gordon Winter, who worked for BOSS from 1973 to 1979 reveals that during the war in Zimbabwe, South African forces in collaboration with Rhodesian secret police agents, carried out a series of armed acts in Mozambique having meanwhile propagated the story that these acts originated from the so-called National Resistance Movement, MNR. The former BOSS agent said in his book that Pretoria had spent 40,000,000 dollars, about 1,500,000 contos in the building of the so-called National Resistance Movement, as a special force of its army, including some Mozambican counter-revolutionaries.
