M10 News Review (135) 18/8/88

South Africa's MNR bandits destroyed a total of 422 primary schools in the northern province of Nampula between 1983 and March 1988, according to a report in the 7 August issue of the Mozambican Sunday paper 'Domingo'. This was about 40% of the school network in Nampula. In 1983, before the bandit onslaught, there were 1,096 primary schools functioning in the province. As a result, 38,000 children have been deprived of the opportunity to study. In the same period, 80 Nampula teachers are known to have been murdered, eight were mutilated, and about 1,000 lost all their possessions in MNR raids.
