

Mozambique Proposal

■ JOHANNESBURG—Mozambique has proposed reopening formal security talks with South Africa in an apparent attempt to curb right-wing rebels it says are backed by Pretoria.

In an unannounced move, Mozambican President Joaquim Chissano sent an envoy to meet South African President P. W. Botha on Tuesday.

A statement issued by South African Foreign Minister Roelof F. (Pik) Botha said the two agreed their countries should send representatives as soon as possible to discuss reconvening a joint security commission.

South Africa denies that it supports the guerrillas.
