Argus Africa News Service

MAPUTO. — South African police have joined their Mozambican counterparts in a bid to curb gun-running.

Head of the South African trade mission Mr David Laubscher told a newspaper here: "The smuggling of weapons is very worrying. We see more and more semi-automatic weapons being used for criminal activities and to advance political aims. It seems to be quite a lucrative business."

He said the traffic continued in spite of the arrest of many people on both sides of the border.
