

Guerrillas attack tourist camp ^{21/7/73}

Salisbury, July 20

Frelimo terrorists have attacked the main tourist camp in the Gorangoza game reserve in Mozambique. In one of their most daring raids, about 90 rounds from automatic weapons were fired into the Chitengo camp, which is only about 25 miles north of the main road linking Salisbury and Beira.

No one was hurt, according to an Argus Africa News Service report. So far the Portuguese authorities have not commented on the attack.

On July 1 a Frelimo band attacked a Spanish touring party north of the Gorangoza reserve, killing a leading surgeon. The latest attack is believed to have occurred earlier this week.

According to travellers who were at Gorangoza, the terrorists opened fire just after a native drum had signalled that the restaurant was open for the evening meal. The camp was believed to have been fairly full at the time.

Mr Ian Smith, the Rhodesian Prime Minister, speaking at the opening of a new bridge in the Sabi valley area in south-eastern Rhodesia, said that while terrorist incursions in the country's north-eastern areas had proved to be more serious and of longer duration than expected, there had been a marked improvement in the situation recently.
