Mozambique forces 'unproductive' into rural work "The "coercive phase" began

From Joseph Hanlon in Maputo

Thousands of unemployed have been sent out of Maputo and other cities as part of a campaign to send the "unproductive" to rural areas to Those whose documents are present drought and which has grow food. Hundreds more are not in order are taken to "verdetained centres."

Frelimo recently ruled that headed by a judge no one could remain in a city recognised means of support, thousands of people have spent voluntarily registered Maputo two weeks ago. House-to-house they go Some have been sent searches and checks of people to work on plantatons that are on the street continue. Most short of labour. Many have people are expected to carry been sent to the remote Niassa four cards: identity, work, province, which is one of the residence, and national service, few areas unaffected by the eventually go before a panel

No statistics have been re- government unless they had a job, or other leased, but probably tens of National Resistance. The unemployed were given hours or days in verification until the end of June to regis- posts. Most are eventually reter "voluntarily." They could leased, but thousands have choose to return to the rural been declared unemployed and area they came from, or select sent to evacuation centres. some other place, but only 200 They are shipped out of the in city in a few days with only a few personal possessions.

They have no choice where surplus food. It appears that "evacuation ification posts," where they people are not being sent to drought areas, or to zones where they might join the anti-

> The campaign was introduced hastily and with inadequate preparation. Regular air services have internal ground to a halt, leaving many people stranded as planes are diverted to carry the unemployed. The initial four evacuation centres soon became cities. Some people have found jobs or earn a legitimate living as artisans and can stay. But tens of thousands live off relaprofessional tives aueuers. black-marketeers, petty thieves, or prostitutes.

Mozambique

overcrowded and more were to inform families of those detained. Even the Government

"some people having to run from post to post in search of reverse the migration to the

The campaign is intended to Insufficient plans were made talked opened.

daily. Noticias.

their relatives.

The position of women in this clean-up is particularly complex. Unemployed single women are being forced to leave, taking any children they have with them. But housewives are considered employed, even if the husbands is away. De facto marriages are recognised

The long tradition migrant labour in the region leads to shifting relationships. Some women have husbands in the South African mines and a boyfriend in Maputo. Some men have a city wife and a country wife. Depending on an official's view of necessity, such women can be labelled prostituges and deported.

The Interior Minister, Mr Armando Guebuza, who heads the campaign, has visited evacuation centres and ordered release the immediate pregnant women.

Gdn.

The Guardian 19 July 1983