TOKYO. — Japan decided yesterday to extend the peacekeeping duties of its Self Defense Force (SDF) in Mozambique until February 1995, government officials said.

The government made the decision as the United Nations extended the overall term of its peacekeeping operations in the country until November because of the delay in disarming anti-government forces, the officials said.

Japan, which first dispatched SDF members to Mozambique in May last year, will send another group in June to replace its current forces. — Sapa-AFP.
