

SA poison plan exposed

HARARE — The African National Congress of South Africa yesterday accused the Pretoria regime of trying to poison ANC representatives in Mozambique.

ANC president Cde Oliver Tambo told a news conference here that the P. W. Botha regime had used another country to bring poisoned sugar destined for the ANC representatives in the Mozambican capital of Maputo.

"They poisoned sugar which was to be distributed to ANC members. It was brought into Mozambique by a country in which the Pretoria regime operates freely," he said, without naming the country.

The ANC leader vowed that the liberation movement would intensify the armed struggle against the racist regime and its law enforcement agencies.

Cde Tambo also accused the Western media of collaborating with the South African government by reporting "lies" put out by the regime.

Cde Tambo said that he was shocked that the British Broadcasting Corporation had transmitted the South African version of Monday's murder of four people in Botswana by South African soldiers without mentioning what the Botswana government had to say about it.

"In Botswana the South Africans killed four people and they said those were members of the ANC yet the Botswana government said at least two were Botswana nationals. — Ziana.
