[Text] The meeting of the joint Mozambican-South African security commission ended in Pretoria today. A communique issued at the end of the meeting refers to an exchange of letters between Presidents Chissano and P.W. Botha last April. The document states that, as a result of that exchange of letters, it was decided to reestablish the joint Mozambican - South African security commission within the context of the Nkomati Accord.

The communique stresses that the reestablishment of the joint security commission was an historic decision by the two countries within the framework of efforts to create a climate of peace for economic cooperation.

The Mozambican delegation to the meeting was led by Mozambican Army Commander Lieutenant General Tobias Dai. Neil van Heerden, director general of foreign affairs, headed the South African team.
