

Rhodie's skills find new buyer

The former head of the South African department of information at the time of the 'Info scandal' in 1973 said this week the Mozambique government has asked him to prepare "a five-year programme on how to build bridges to the West".

Dr Eschel Rhodie said from his home in Atlanta, Georgia: "They asked me to advise them on how to publicise the new democratic image of the country and how to encourage foreign investment and trade".

Rhodie is planning to return to South Africa in February after more than ten years in self-imposed exile.

[Local reports.]