

Zimbabwean Foreign Minister says military help for Mozambique to continue Nathan Shamuyarira told a meeting of the Zimbabwe-Britain Society in Harare on 7th April that although Zimbabwe hoped the crisis in Mozambique would not continue indefinitely, "we are prepared to go a long way in supporting the Mozambique government", the Pan-African agency reported on the 8th. He said Zimbabwe spent about 29m US dollars annually in military and humanitarian assistance to Mozambique. On Zimbabwe's relations with the UK, Shamuyarira said that although the two countries agreed on many issues, "our problem arises from the problem with South Africa. Britain supports South Africa in essence by continuing to encourage investment and urging us to talk to the South African government. . . The only peaceful way to fight the regime is to impose economic sanctions, but Britain is against it."
